GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

CONCRETE AND VISUAL POETRY

U- @ U - @ U - @ - U @ - U @ - U @ - U

* Though it does have historical roots, concrete poetry has enjoyed attention only within the last twenty-five years or so. This attention runs parallel with developments in "pop" art, in impressionistic photography, in graphics, architecture, etc. The most common type of concrete poetry depends on incorporating an array of poetically pleasing words or phrases with a strong visual component which identifies the topic in some way. For example, a three-liner such as:

> Large blackbirds Peppering the sky, Announce autumn.

> > J. Romatowski

would be teamed up with a visual component (blackbirds) and would look like this perhaps:

Another three-liner.

The sands of time Drip relentlessly With clear finality.

J. Romatowski

y be arranged cleverly within an hour glass, for example,

The visual impact is meant to enhance the enjoyment of the sensitive lines.

It would be a good idea to prepare your class for the writing of concrete poetry with related activities. Proverbs, the idioms of our language, sayings, and even words alone can serve as starting points. Using words with strong visual appeal, can you and your students make words look like their meanings? For example:

Try these with your class:

flag tall tear (as in crying) small wide wide stretch lightning explode
